

I thought the article "The Problem with 'Learning Styles'" was a good read. I thought it was informative and gave me a little better insight on how others learn. After reading I thought of myself as a learner and thought about what typically helps me learn the best and I would definitely say I am a visual learner, and seem to get information better this way. However I definitely know people who hate this type of learning and prefer writing or listening better. Although looking at the study they conducted I was surprised to see that the way of Learning the students picked the students failed to employ that way of learning. Overall thought i thought the reading was interesting.