

I found The Last Lecture to be incredibly interesting. It was eye-opening to learn how different people learn in different ways and how various teaching methods can have such a big impact on their success. Randy Pausch's reflections on his own childhood were especially captivating, and they made me think a lot about my own early dreams and how far I've come in terms of pursuing them.

One dream I had as a child was to become a marine biologist. I used to think about it all the time, but now, as an adult, I realize I'm not on that path. Still, hearing Randy's perspective was both motivating and inspiring. It really made me reflect on my own life, the choices I've made, and how much I can still achieve if I put my mind to it. Overall, his speech was a powerful reminder to think about our dreams and to keep pushing forward, no matter where we are in life. The lecture was quite emotional although for me because thinking about how Randy had terminal cancer it was kind of a hard watch, with him knowing what was coming. Although one thing I enjoyed quite a bit was that even though this was a sad lecture Randy's use of humor made the lecture so enjoyable to watch.
